吃子的技巧

- 扑 (Throw-in)
- 倒扑 (Snapback)
- 接不归 (Oi-otoshi, Connect & Die)

打 (Throw-in)

A throw-in is a sacrifice stone played at the point where the enemy wants to connect, giving rise to a false eye, shortage of liberties, snapback, oiotoshi (connect-and-die), or squeeze.

The expression feed may also be used: "(force-)feed the enemy a stone".

A throw-in is different from a nakade. A nakade is a play inside a real eye.
A throw-in makes or maintains a false eye.

倒扑 (Snapback)

A snapback is the position created by playing a single stone with the intent of being captured because the reply to the capture is a larger capture.

所谓“倒扑”就是把自己的棋子送入对方虎口，通过牺牲自己来吃掉对方更多棋子的方法。

接不归 (Oi-otoshi)

Oi-otoshi (追い落とし , chasing and capturing, or, perhaps better given as, chasing down), a Japanese go term, describes a situation where a stone or group of stones is put into atari in such a way that there is no escape. This occurs usually when the only way to save such a group temporarily is to connect, and that the resulting group is still in atari.

Hence the related English terminology, connect-and-die, and the Chinese 接不归 (unable to connect back).

Oiotoshi is also known as serial atari.